THE TEXT

- Carla Loft, from Cheshire, decided to drop out of university when she was 22 years old to work full-time. But after having her first child, she felt 'unfulfilled' and wanted to resume her studies. Therefore, the mother-of-two started looking at distance-learning courses via The Open University. In particular, she liked the look of the Combined Professional Studies Course. After making her choice, Carla began her foundation degree, juggling her studies with raising children and holding down a full-time job.
- Carla said she sometimes found herself studying late into the night as it was the only time she had to herself. However, after years of hard work, she has finally graduated. And despite it not being an easy journey, she has encouraged other mothers to follow in her footsteps if they want to resume their studies. Throughout her degree, Carla, who works as an accounts and administration assistant, said she was motivated by her sons, who she wanted to prove something to.
- After receiving her certificate, Carla posted on social media to show off her incredible achievement. She said: "At 42, I finally got my degree! It's been hard studying while raising two kids, working, and the stress of daily life! There were times that I wanted to give up but I have proved to my sons that if you really want something, then anything is possible." A fellow mother replied: "I was in the same shoes as you. I picked up the baton in the late 90s and completed my BA degree in 2003. Well worth the wait and I'm sure like me you feel proud of what you have achieved."
